Underground sprinkler systems.

Installing an underground sprinkler system will be much easier if you start with some basic information and a well thought-out plan.

First, find out your home's water flow rate in gallons per minute (GPM). This will determine how many sprinkler heads you can install and the diameter of the pipe. Get a one-gallon container and time how long it takes to fill with water from your home's outside faucet.

Next, draw a layout of where you need the sprinkler heads, making sure that their spray diameter covers your lawn. Your hardware store can show you which sprinkler heads fit best, and which fittings you'll need. The total GPM of your sprinklers should not exceed 75 percent of your home's total GPM.

Then, to make your job easier, rent a trencher and dig a trench at least 9-in. deep, depending on local codes, sloping slightly for drainage. You'll also have several pipes to cut. A tubing cutter is much easier to use and cuts cleaner than a hacksaw. Buy or rent one.

Preparing soil for great gardens.

Renting a tiller can make your project run smoother. It loosens soil and prepares ground for new plantings. A tiller also improves drainage and allows plant roots to reach deeper more easily.

So, what should you be looking for in a tiller? Two of the main things you should consider are the size and condition of the land you will be preparing. Smaller tillers may have trouble breaking up large chunks of soil. However, if you need to simply re-till previously prepared land, a smaller electric tiller or cultivator may be the best choice. On the other hand, a large garden tiller is probably your best bet for larger areas or land that has never been cleared.

Just remember that tilling can be strenuous if you use a larger model. In many cases, the lighter the weight, the better.

Smaller tillers are also more maneuverable—a plus when cultivating around existing plant beds. Many models also feature adjustable cultivating depths and tine widths, enhancing maneuverability in tight spots.

Party tents come in an amazing variety of shapes, sizes, and materials, so you have several options available to you. But you should certainly make sure that you get a size large enough to hold all of your guests.

A 20' x 20' tent is big enough for around 40 people. Or, for larger events, a 40' x 50' tent can comfortably accommodate up to 150 people. Just keep in mind that, if you also add a dance floor, bar, or dining tables, the tent will hold fewer people. Speak with one of our rental experts if you need help making a decision.

Most tents are very easy to set up, requiring few tools more than a hammer to stake the tent to the ground. Tent setup may also be available. Ask one of our rental experts for help.
