Underground sprinkler systems.

Installing an underground sprinkler system will be much easier if you start with some basic information and a well thought-out plan.

First, find out your home's water flow rate in gallons per minute (GPM). This will determine how many sprinkler heads you can install and the diameter of the pipe. Get a one-gallon container and time how long it takes to fill with water from your home's outside faucet.

Next, draw a layout of where you need the sprinkler heads, making sure that their spray diameter covers your lawn. Your hardware store can show you which sprinkler heads fit best, and which fittings you'll need. The total GPM of your sprinklers should not exceed 75 percent of your home's total GPM.

Then, to make your job easier, rent a trencher and dig a trench at least 9-in. deep, depending on local codes, sloping slightly for drainage. You'll also have several pipes to cut. A tubing cutter is much easier to use and cuts cleaner than a hacksaw. Buy or rent one.

Expert advice

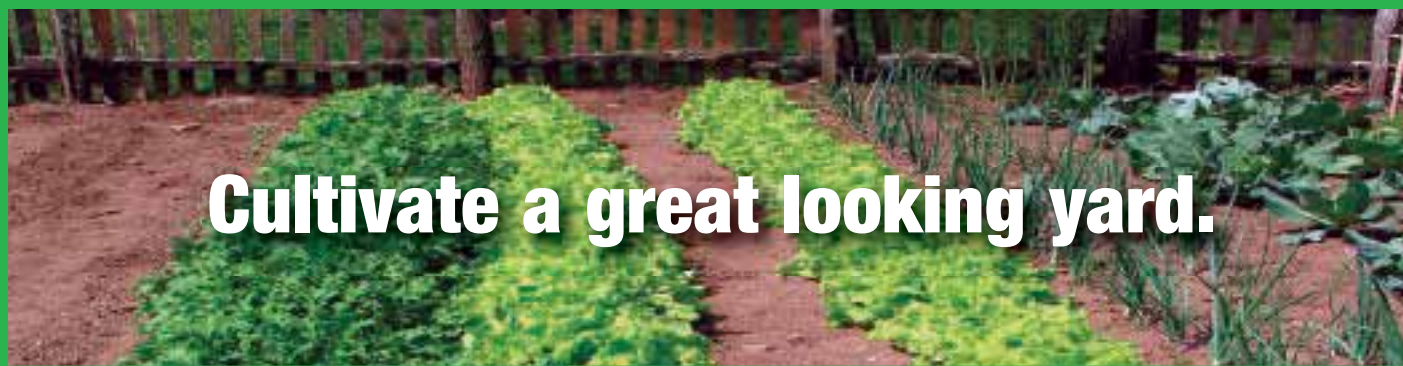

Preparing soil for great gardens.

Renting a tiller can make your project run smoother. It loosens soil and prepares ground for new plantings. A tiller also improves drainage and allows plant roots to reach deeper more easily.

So, what should you be looking for in a tiller? Two of the main things you should consider are the size and condition of the land you will be preparing. Smaller tillers may have trouble breaking up large chunks of soil. However, if you need to simply re-till previously prepared land, a smaller electric tiller or cultivator may be the best choice. On the other hand, a large garden tiller is probably your best bet for larger areas or land that has never been cleared.

Just remember that tilling can be strenuous if you use a larger model. In many cases, the lighter the weight, the better.

Smaller tillers are also more maneuverable—a plus when cultivating around existing plant beds. Many models also feature adjustable cultivating depths and tine widths, enhancing maneuverability in tight spots.

Party tents come in an amazing variety of shapes, sizes, and materials, so you have several options available to you. But you should certainly make sure that you get a size large enough to hold all of your guests.

A 20' x 20' tent is big enough for around 40 people. Or, for larger events, a 40' x 50' tent can comfortably accommodate up to 150 people. Just keep in mind that, if you also add a dance floor, bar, or dining tables, the tent will hold fewer people. Speak with one of our rental experts if you need help making a decision.

Most tents are very easy to set up, requiring few tools more than a hammer to stake the tent to the ground. Tent setup may also be available. Ask one of our rental experts for help.

Expert advice

Building a concrete patio.

This project takes a lot of time and material, but with the right equipment it can be easy to add beauty and function to your outdoor living space for years.

One of the first steps in building a patio is the excavation. Although this can be done with a simple shovel, depending on the volume of earth that needs to be moved, renting a mini excavator makes the job so much faster and easier—especially, for patios larger than just a few feet wide.

And when it comes time to mix your concrete, this can be done by hand in a bucket or wheelbarrow. But renting a concrete mixer lets you get the pouring completed in a fraction of the time.

Finally, once all the concrete is poured, leveling it is much easier and faster with a power trowel.

You'll feel more confident in taking on even large concrete projects if you have the right tools. Ask one of our rental experts for advice.

Expert advice

Hanging drywall.

Installing drywall takes time and effort—and leaves behind a lot of dust—but if you take on this project the right way with the right equipment, it can be a one-person job.

When hanging drywall, stagger pieces so a single line isn't obvious in the final product. Cut so drywall ends on a stud center.

You'll need a rasp or keyhole saw to cut around light switches and electrical boxes. And if you need to cut circles for a can light fixture there are techniques and products for that, as well.

Holding up drywall pieces and attaching them to wall studs or ceiling joists usually takes two people. But renting a drywall jack to lift and hold heavy pieces makes attachment fast and easy.

You can also purchase joint compound premix, but if you want to mix it yourself, simply buy a five-gallon bucket and rent a power mixer to make that job easier, too.

Your rental experts can recommend products that can work for your particular project.

Start with the essentials.
